traditional instrumentation includes handheld drums (bombo, caja) and flutes (quena), as well as the charango, a small creolized guitar considered the national instrument of bolivia. taquirari compositions are structured as aabb or aabbcc and their lyrical content is almost always romantic, even though the genre originally lacked vocals and harmony. the music has a duple 2/4 meter and a syncopated rhythm. taquiraris are pentatonic, which suggests cultural exchange with andean folk music, especially huayno. a few weeks ago, thomas received a "sorcerer" flute, about 10 years old, from his friend andreas keller in munich. needless to say, it is beautiful, and given that thomas is a lover of many things german this one is now an instant favorite. so we have a duo tonight playing arrangements from the german composer anton webern, and his lovely "sorcerer" flute!!! after our thoroughly satisfying performance on saturday of pagodes & oranges (part 1), i was wondering if we could do a similar piece but with perhaps just the harps and flutes. i have always wanted to do a piece of "fantasie" for this instrument, about a dream or vision. my path has crossed, many times, that of claudel, de falla, debussy, debussys daughter, pierre boulez, solti and many others. and i've always been drawn to their work, and also to cikits lirik flute duet. i went back to my most passionate love of debussys, the "chants d'automne". i played that for a few months, with great pleasure, and even thought that i could create something similar for this instrument. so i started out, and my plans went pretty well until i realized that i would need a different score.

the library of alexandria the library of alexandria was the foremost library of classical antiquity, located at alexandria, egypt. founded by ptolemy i soter ("soter" meaning "the savior"), a greek macedonian ruler of alexandria, it was one of the largest and most important libraries of the ancient world. the library was established soon after the death of cleopatra, ptolemy's last queen (as a means to protect the library), and was conceived to be the third library of the "library of ptolomaic science" (after alexandria itself, and the older library of the muses). en 1180, giovanni da bologna empereur de constantinople. gaspard de colonna, un grand musicien flamand, se rend à constantinople pour y exercer sa profession. il compose un livre de son temps sur la flûte - aujourd'hui perdue. ce livre est élaboré en 10 pages. il comprend 21 heures de parties, et commence par une préliminaire qui accorde une grande importance aux airs de flûte utilisés à la musique théâtrale. il dit qu'il a composé le livre à lausanne, en suisse. la tradition a supposé que les parties disposaient d'une infinité de possibilités d'interprétation, ce qui explique que de nombreux airs n'étaient pas performés à ce jour. il cite les derniers airs méconnus de son temps comme l'air du pape, le trompette ou le violon. avec un particulièrement classement des cordes, il souligne aussi la haute valeur de la flûte de précision, et rappelle le rôle de la danse des doigts, pour les flûtes à doubles bouts. il cite alors l'air de flûte de la cantilène du regret, et classe les différentes ébauches dont il a fait usage. il conclut en expliquant que les concerts en peuple de flûte de musique théâtrale ont été bâtis par les partis les plus prestigieux de l'europe, et que la flûte est une musique haut de gamme. 5ec8ef588b
